CHERRY PECTORAL

For the Cure of

COUGHS, COLDS, HOARSENESS, BRONCHITIS, WHOOPING-COUGH, CROUP, ASTHMA, AND CONSUMPTION.

In offering to the community this justly celebrated remedy for diseases of the throat and lungs, it is not our wish to trifle with the lives or health of those afflicted, but frankly to lay before them the opinions of scientific men, and some of the evidences of its success, for which they can judge for themselves. We merely pledge ourselves that the statements we make in behalf of Cherry Pectoral shall be sustained by the testimony of its efficacy, nor will we hold out false hopes to suffering humanity, which facts will not warrant.

Many proofs are here given, and we solicit an investigation of the public to all we publish, feeling confident that the more they are known, the more they will be esteemed as reliable, and the medicine worthy their confidence and patronage.

From the distinguished Professor of Chemistry and Materia Medica, Bowdoin College.

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 7, 1851.

Thoughts of a Winter Evening.

At different seasons of the year the thoughts run in different channels. Spring suggests pleasant reflections, and tends to drive from the mind, even of the habitually sedate, all species of melancholy and revives the spirits to new life and energy, as the fertilizing showers and the glorious sunshine of May cause budding nature to burst forth and the leaves and flowers to spring up from their winter sleep. June, the glorious month of balmy air, floral fragrance and woodland music, breaks, as it were, the spell but to riches peace and happiness to all hearts. The poor and the rich then are alike at ease, the former fearless of biting frosts, tireless storms nor nights made sleepless by cold, nakedness or the dreadful expectation of starvation; the latter are not checked in the midst of their revels and made sad by complaining blasts and drifting snows.

Midsummer changes the scene, and brings with it a corresponding change in the thoughts. The balmy and blithesome Spring vanishes and an oppressive, enervating influence preys upon the drooping spirit. The high noon sun and the long sultry days have borne down the light heart. The step becomes less elastic, and every movement less buoyant.

But Autumn dawns on space, and another change comes over the face of nature, and like wine to the spirits. The cool bracing air of September affects most favorably both the physical and mental functions. The step becomes more elastic and the whole body and soul seem to be endued with new life and energy. Then is the harvest of nature's riches then too, the mind may reap its golden fruits. Then the mental is clear, the mind active, and penetrating. Thoughts wanders abroad cautiously but happily in search of new wonders and new mysteries, which it longs to investigate and solve. 'Tis the season of plenty not of want. No sad sorrowful forebodings harass the mind, peace contentment and happiness dwell around.

The seasons keep on, the journey does not stop nor to survey the various scenery which undulates their coming and departure. The fine days of Autumn have gone and with them have passed the scenes and things of the season. The sun shines in heavens with its shorter path and is seemingly coy to the full heat and light. The cold winds sigh and moan about the borders of the forest and around our dwellings. The snow flys and drifts, and when the pale sun goes down we are hemmed in by a triple wall of ice and frost. We feel more sensibly than ever, trace the connection between external nature and the action of the mind and emotions of the soul. What had revived and pleased us in Spring, who had lulled and soothed us in Summer, strengthened and satisfied us in Autumn is gone and

We all long
Not plaintive nor prayerful no yearnings of the soul,
Nor the merry tricks nor fancy's vocal music
The chirpings which the Cricket tunes the child
To rest, November nights, nor yet the bird
That sings the lullaby of the vegetable dead —
Can bring again

Nor is the absence of the beauties of which the other season boast the only cause of the saddening and disheartening feelings that steal over one of a winter night. There are pleasures which one cannot taste, and determined and know but this want is in part repaid by the social joys peculiar to old Winter. Did Bryan say that Winter diminishes beautiful who go about Summer knows? We feel inclined to think sometimes that no one but a poet can be capable of such a realization. The realities of a winter night, when the storm rages without and the fire ackles within, are far from being pleasant or recent.

There is, moreover, a chord of sympathy in the human heart and in our little cherished circle when one sees the half clad, half fed wretch wandering about the streets in search of charity or employment—for the feels that there would be no wants! Does not the heart feel the horrors of the cold season strike, philanthropy known learn as it reflects that hundreds of helpless children and tender children even within the boundaries of our favored land are doubtless at the fierce blast, and unprovided against the severity of the season?

To the poor and to those any time an unwelcome season. The howling storm and the cold wind may be felt or heeded by the fortunate who have the most of the many wants provided for but to the dear late they bring fearful scenes and dismal forebodings

"But who will listen when the poor complain?
Who read by heart, a tale so of woe is true."

Many there are who would gladly lend a helping hand did they but realize that suffering and want were in the land. But he who with sympathetic heart, and open hand is ever ready to do acts of kindness and charity must confess that with the refreshing that gratification and misery have ever made their fatal attack with men, and that he is blessed who helps alleviate the sufferings of the poor. Human life has its joys and its sorrows, its lights and its shadows, it has its seasons of sunshine and storm like the year. The Spring is mild pleasant, and full of promise; the Summer is glad with flowers and sunshine; Autumn is abundant with golden fruits and let not the Winter be ever dreary and desolate. If tempests and storms gather and break without let all be calm and tranquil within.

☞ The Commissioners of the World's Fair have nobly branded the retail liquor business with universal outlawry by refusing to allow any one to sell wines spirits or beer within their inclosures. They have also provided that all who have refreshment stands shall furnish visitors with glasses of water gratis, who may apply for them.

This speaks in trumpet tongues of the power and spread of the principles of temperance. The great festival of arts and the triumphs of the mind and the hand over the resources and products of the earth, places the seal of the emphatic and significant protest against the sale and use of intoxicating drinks as a beverage. ☞ We have been shown a letter by H. B. Farnham, Esq., from a gentleman of the highest respectability, stating that on a recent journey he met a man between Baltimore and Philadelphia, just returning from California, apparently just ready to die. He came on the steamship Sonora from Chagres to Charleston S. C. and there took the cars. He stated that a man belonging to Bangor died on board the steamer before her arrival at Charleston leaving in the hands of the Captain of the boat, some thirteen hundred dollars in gold dust. His name was not known. He described him as being about 50 or 55 years old and said he had lost his fingers or a part of them from one hand. The dying man wished that some person in Bangor to be written to, that the matter might be looked after and the legal heirs secured in their rights to the property.

We do not know to whom this may refer but we publish it in the hope that some person interested in the matter may see it.

☞ We have received several communications relative to the lectures now in the course of delivery before the Mercantile Association. We decline to publish them because we do not wish to grant them a place while the individuality of those who first entered the field, after being engaged for the lectures, have the choice of seats and so of each latter comer of the unoccupied seats until the house is filled. First come first served is the motto of the Association. I am not aware as was once complained of, that those "dandy Germans" pour in and thick fingered republic North did come to the walls of the Mother of the World, they rode in our horse cars and declared that they took tickets and they declared their rights.

The author of this work has selected a group of the Hungarian nobles and the political history of Hungary and expounding their essential principles within the compass of these two hundred closely printed pages, a vast human weakness united with the most lofty powers. It is a work well calculated to interest attention to the recent scenes in that unfortunate country of which it speaks are but the concluding acts of the great tragedy of the ages.

Corn & Cob.

To the Editor of the Whig & Courier

If you can spare a corner of your paper from politics to George I would like to call the attention of farmers and owners of mills in the country to a subject that seems to me little understood in this section and which should at least every one of those in any way connected with the growing or feeding of cattle. Many kinds of stock from the country for I am aware that those on the city are so constantly in demand for the ordinary work of the farm that they could not be spared for experiments, but with cattle, sheep and swine, I am sure that a correct knowledge of the value of corn and cob meal would be of great benefit to the feeder and consumer.

A writer in the Columbia (Pa.) Spy states that he has on pretty accurately ascertained that thirteen bushels of field corn in the ear, ground up corn and cobs together, will go at least as much nourishment in feeding cattle as nine bushels of corn will out of the cob. The difference is owing, in the great quantity of saccharine matter contained in the cobs as well as the addicional stimulus of taste it on all of the food, which is all important for grain-ivorous animals.

Another writer in the Farmer's Cabinet, who appears fully to understand the subject with which he is there discussing after quoting from Steward a Stable Economy to show the importance of this principle, we attention in the present occasion may be shown that the cob itself is fully equal only lately to the same quantity of corn for the purpose and then he goes on to say, "Now it would appear that the cob ground with the corn would be just the proper thing for mixing with the corn the fodder food, for all purposes, and which by cutting carefully can be supplied with more regularity and convenience, or at least as the cob when at the same time as the exception of beans. The philosophy of this arrangement is quite certainly obvious. The most accurate, and lately conducted experiment with which I am acquainted was by Mr. Minor, Lacy of Ridgway, Va. and communicated at the time to the Agricultural Society of Albemarle county of that State. His experiments was conducted by a distillate on and the result of the experiment is entitled to the most considerable ration, as it was undertaken with the express object of determining the relative proportions of the nutritive matter in the grain and cobs of the Indian corn. Ten bushels of the corn and cob meal ground together, were taken which weighed 400 lbs. Thirty and ten bushels of pure corn meal were taken which weighed 1000 lbs. They were both brought separately with great care and accuracy. The product of the pure corn was eighteen gallons of the product of the mixture of corn and cob was thirteen gallons of spirit, each of the same degree of proof. Now it is generally agreed that the cob constitutes about one half of the bulk of corn. If this be true the product, then should have been nine gallons only or one half what the pure corn produced. But thirteen gallons were obtained four of which must have been derived from the cob or its woody matter; thus proving that the quantity of spirit, then it is clear that when we shall ten bushels of corn and throw away the cobs, we throw away a portion of food equal to the difference between ten and thirteen or nearly one half of the shelled corn.

This experiment is conclusive and nicely conducted does not settle the question of how much it is to the cob contains, but it tells us that of two bushels, it does not think and that the relative value or the proportion of spirit compared with grain but that the cobs contain a larger proportion than they will bear about the same proportion in point of nourishment to the grain as they do in regard to spirit. This experiment as I say is decisive in favor of the cob meal.

But we need not confine ourselves to theory alone I can speak of the value of cobs as food for animals when used with the clear grain. In the Massachusetts Agricultural Reports is a communication from Mr. Rice of Shrewsbury on the subject of feeding cattle, which contained a part of his business in the course of which I gave an account of one of his experiments using cob meal — the second year in which I made use of cob meal I thought I would try the experiment by feeding on pork with corn and cobs ground and the other with corn meal alone — having a pen of eight hogs evenly matched as to no one was each fed which was boiled in the same manner as above. The corn was put up to a little more than one third and the other with one third oats, to which I gave each an equal quantity at each meal. To one which had corn and oats and cobs became dainty and would not eat his allowance, while the other kept a regular course. The also went to over three weeks a day. When taken to market and killed, they weighed 2860 lbs. the one fed on corn and oats weighing a half hundred the most, while the one fed on corn and cob meal was considered half a dollar a hundred the best beef, the one fed on corn and cobs had 183 lbs of tallow, and the other 152 lbs.

From this and many other experiments which I will not take time to detail it would appear that the cob when ground with the grain is of nearly or quite equal value with oats and in general as the increase of weight made of feeding is adopted, that the shelling is generally abandoned by those who feed but any considerable quantity of Indian corn. I understand that in New York Massachusetts and New Hampshire and I presume in many other States the introduction of corn and cob crackers is becoming very general and they have been introduced even in some parts of our own State. On visiting the corn lot of a friend in New Hampshire the last winter where four or five hundred bushels of corn in the ear were stowed, and remarking one of those primitive contrivances for shelling which we can use in our fathers' days (either the old frying pan handle or an inverted shovel, I forget which) I enquired why he had his corn shelled. Oh said he, "we only shell what is required for the table, never any other all the remainder is ground corn and cob." This gentleman tilled his carriage Horses, working oxen, cows and swine, in this manner, and their condition was certainly a recommendation to the practice. Lumbering teams also I found were there fed in the same manner and the ill effect of the too concentrated meal alone was thereby avoided.

The addition of the cob meal also to the refuse of the corn, will certainly make another item in favor of this practice, which those in the immediate vicinity of a mill would surely appreciate.

There is one item in the expense of pur[illegible] which I am fully aware is of the use of clear grain alone. C. N. Bement, Esq., one of the most prominent farmers in Western New York, directs the attention to the reader of the Cultivator (N. Y.) Farmer, to the great value of meal obtained by grinding corn and cob together for stock and says, from the many evidences of practical farmers as well as from experiments of our own I cannot but regard it upon the attention of the prudent farmer. That there is a nutritive substance in the cob no one we think that has paid any attention to the subject will pretend to deny. In throwing away the cobs of our corn we have been wasting very good feed. But besides the actual economy (says a writer in the American Farmer) there is another advantage in the way of feeding corn, which ought to engage the attention of every farmer. It is unquestionably true that the unground grain of corn is heating to the stomach of all animals and of difficult digest on producing cholic and other inflammatory disorders particularly in horses. They are deprived of the benefits to be derived from the stimulus of distention (so necessary to the health of all animals) by being unable to eat a sufficient bulk to produce it, before they become satisfied. I think that those who are accustomed to feed Indian meal in this section, for the working oxen will read by all these remarks to their own experience and knowledge the truth. Indeed it is a common remark of those conversant with woods cattle that after having been accustomed to the liberal use of clear meal they seldom thrive well without the cob, and are almost invariably more or less disposed to an unhealthy state of the liver being frequently exhibited on post mortem examination.

A writer in the Columbia (Pa.) Spy states that he has on pretty accurately ascertained that thirteen bushels of field corn in the ear, ground up corn and cobs together, will go at least as much nourishment in feeding cattle as nine bushels of corn will out of the cob. The difference is owing, in the great quantity of saccharine matter contained in the cobs as well as the additional stimulus of taste it on all of the food, which is all important for grain-ivorous animals.

CONGRESS

WASHINGTON Feb. 5

In the Senate Mr. Dodge introduced a resolution of the Wisconsin Legislature repealing the resolutions of the former sess on censuring Senator Walker for his amendment relative to California a two years ago.

Mr. Walker of Wisconsin said that in consequence of an amendment proposed by him two years ago extending the constitution of the United States to California he was censured by the Legislature and that he was instructed to resign and for it he had been denounced by Free Soil papers and others — Though he had been hurt by these proceedings, he was conscious of having done nothing wrong. He explained his course to his constituents and they reversed the condemnation. For this act of justice he returned them his warmest thanks.

Mr. Seward presented petitions from the Assistant Marshals of New York for an increased compensation for services rendered.

Petitions by Mr. Hamlin for the repeal of the fugitive slave law were tabled.

Mr. Borland offered a joint resolution in favor of a Military Academy like West Point in one of the South Western States.

Mr. Butler made a report that Senators appointed by governors to fill vacancies could hold the seats till their successors present their credentials.

The joint resolution for distributing the works of Hon. John Q. Adams was passed.

The Senate then resumed the business of land claims in California. Considerable debate ensued and after various amendments it had been agreed upon the bill was ordered to be engrossed.

The Homestead resolution making land warrants assignable was debated but no vote was taken.

The Senate then went into executive session and soon after adjourned.

In the House the pending question was on seconding the demand for the previous question on the subs itute of Mr. Bayley for the bill establishing a branch mint in California and New York which substitute merely makes a general counterfeiting or embezzling ingots of gold authorizing it to be issued by the Assayers offices in California to be received in payment for postage and that there is also in Oregon for 5 years.

Mr. Bayley moved a call of the House. The yeas and nays were taken and the call not sustained to—71 to 107.

The demand for the previous question was then seconded, and the main question ordered to be put, which was decided in the affirmative—Yeas 93 nays 100.

In ordering the original bill for a mint at New York and San Francisco to be read, Mr. Rockwell and Mr. Brown moved to lay the bill on the table. Decided in the negative—yeas 107 nays 92.
